

The Adventures of Quakers the Duck

A few years ago, I was building a school project in my hometown, Pisa, Italy. I was trying to build a model of the Tower of Pisa using a hot glue and newspaper. All of a sudden, I heard a loud noise, and I looked up at the Tower and saw my enemy, Buford the Crocodile, laughing at me from on top of the Tower. A piece of the Tower came smashing down, squishing my project!

Only a little bit of the bottom remained, and some of the glue dripped onto my wing. I tried to pick up the piece of the Tower that had fell, but it was extremely heavy, and I dropped it. To my horror, it got stuck to the glue on my wing. I tried to grab it off quickly, but the glue dried super fast, and it was stuck!

Even worse, Buford the Crocodile was climbing down the Tower after me. He started to chase me everywhere. My throat was very dry, so I ran into the nearby coffee shop. Without my noticing, a yellow feather dropped right outside the coffee shop, leading Buford right to me. I went into the store, and got into the crowded line.

After reaching the front of the line, I ordered my favorite coffee, Siena Blend. As I was waiting for my coffee, I started talking to the turtle behind me who happened to be my doctor, Dr. Dribble. Buford has also entered the shop and was searching for me in the crowd.

I explained to my doctor what had happened to my wing, and I showed her the injury. Just then, another animal bumped in Dr. Dribble who spilled her coffee on my injured wing. At first, I yelped in surprise, but then I realized something amazing. The coffee was loosening the glue on my wing!

I wiggled and pulled until it finally came off! I shouted happily, and hugged my doctor. Buford came up, saw my newly healed wing, and ran away screaming!
