The 7th graders at St. Patrick School brought their science textbooks to life when they went to the Stroud Water Research Center on October 21st. The students went on a nature walk, did a variety of stream tests, took samples from the stream, and tested what they found in a laboratory.

"It was a wonderful day to get dirty and go outside to learn more about they have been studying in the classroom," said Therese W. Waters, principal at Saint Patrick School in Kennett Square.
